Give your A/C a break

Don't make your A/C work so hard

It may be hot outside, but you can still manage your energy use this summer.

Here are five ways to give your A/C a break and reduce the energy it uses:

1. Call an HVAC technician. A professional can examine your system and let you know what needs repairing or replacing, which can prevent a mid-summer breakdown.
2. Change or clean air filters. When filters do their job properly, they trap dirt, pet hair and anything else that's floating in the air from recirculating into your home when the air conditioner is blowing. Dirty filters can prevent air from flowing which makes the A/C work extra hard to cool your house. Change or clean your filters as recommended by the manufacturer (typically monthly).
3. Run ceiling fans while people are in the room. When the A/C is running at the same time as a ceiling fan, the room where the fan is located will feel cool enough that you can raise the thermostat. A fan doesn't cool the air, but it creates a breeze that makes anyone in the room feel cooler.
4. Use a dehumidifier. Another great partner for the A/C is an energy-efficient dehumidifier. Lowering the humidity in your home helps the air conditioner work more efficiently to cool your home.
5. Don't create heat. On days when it's warm enough to turn on the air conditioner, turn off your oven, clothes dryer, lamps and other appliances that create heat. Wait until after dark, when the day cools off a bit, before running heat-producing machines.

POOL SAFETY

Secure your pool with appropriate barriers.

Designate a water watcher...and stay in arm's reach of young children.

If a child is missing, check the water first.
